V. Explanations

Gross domestic product (GDP) is one of the most important indicators of the System of National Accounts (SNA), characterizing the final result of the production activities of resident economic units, measured by the value of goods and services produced by these units for final use.

Gross regional product (GRP) is a summary indicator of regional development. GRP is identical to GDP in its economic content; it represents the value of final goods and services produced by economic units resident in a given region.

GRP is calculated at the national level for 14 administrative-territorial entities of the Republic of Uzbekistan (the Republic of Karakalpakstan, 12 regions, and Tashkent city) using the production method.

The production method for calculating GRP is based on the principles of constructing the SNA production account and estimates GRP as the sum of gross value added by type of economic activity at basic prices and net taxes on products. The methodological principles for calculating GRP and its components are similar to those for calculating GDP at the economy-wide level. However, certain components of GDP are not calculated at the regional level or distributed among regions due to the lack and limited information at the regional level, as well as the specific nature of their accounting. Therefore, they are included in the calculation as an undistributed portion only for the Republic of Uzbekistan as a whole.

GDP (GRP) per capita is determined by dividing the total GDP (GRP) at current prices by the average population of the country (region) over a given period.

The following data are used as inputs to calculate the gross domestic (regional) product per capita: gross domestic (regional) product data and demographic and labor statistics.
